

BERN'S FOREBEARS
A Guide to Its Graveyard

Remember friend as you pass by
As you are now so once was I
As I am now so you must be
Prepare for death and follow me

Poem inscribed on tombstone of Joel Kisting,
Row C, No. 22, Bern Church old graveyard

Bern Church's old graveyard was its only burial ground until the 1880s. Its four acres are owned directly by the church, and members of the Bern congregations are entitled to burial sites on the graveyard.

It is truly a "graveyard" and not a cemetery, as the tombstones are arranged in haphazard rows that curl up the hillside they occupy. The effect of a century or more of weathering has disintegrated some stones, creating unexplainable gaps in many of the rows.

The map on the page following will help, hopefully, to guide anyone to a specific burial spot.

In the use of the row-by-row directory, these points may be helpful:

-- The rows are numbered starting from the bottom of the hill upward.

-- Separate numbers were given only for distinct stones. Even if more than one person's inscription is listed, it receives only one number.

-- Stones that share a common base are counted separately. All twin stones are indicated in the notes under the inscription.

-- Where only one or two tombstones were out of line with any larger row, they were designated "a," "b," etc., and included with the lettered row that the stones were to the left of when facing up the hill (that is, Rows A to Z moving from left to right).

-- The inscriptions are complete copies of the wording that appears on the stones. Original spellings and dates are used.

-- Translations of the German stones are not absolutely literal. For dates and age checks, a standard format was used for consistency.

As an example, all dates in the translations give the month (abbreviated in most cases), the day, and the year -- "Jan. 24, 1845," not "24th day of January A.D. 1845," even if the latter is the literal translation. Symbols, dash lines and signature line of the tombstone maker are omitted from the translations.

-- Also, doubled letters that some German tombstones show by putting a bar atop a single letter are indicated as regular double letters.

-- Slashes (/) indicate a new line on the tombstone.

-- Blank lines (____), of course, represent an illegible part of the inscription, and words or numbers enclosed in brackets [] are ones that are reasonable guesses.

-- For stillborn children, "daughter" or "son" is enclosed in brackets in the directory name line. "Stillborn" is used if the sex is not indicated on the stone.

-- Stones that are broken or partially sunken were, for the most part, left undisturbed because of their fragile state. An ellipsis (...) is used indicate that the rest of the inscription is below ground or a part rendered unreadable on a broken stone.

-- Vowels enclosed in parenthese, e.g. (a), represent umlauted vowels.

-- A pair of S's in parentheses, e.g. (ss), represent the German "S set," which generally Anglicizes as a double S.

These inscriptions were read by Laurel Miller, and typed and indexed by Jim Beidler and Mildred H. Beidler. Final decisions on the compilation's content were made by Jim Beidler.

The rusted iron fence surrounding the graveyard was donated in 1909 by Washington K. Hiester, who is buried with his family around the ground's largest monument.
